

Mt. Pumori

Introduction

Mount Pumori is an attractive mountain that lies in upper Khumbu region of Nepal-Tibet border in the Mahalangur section of the Himalayas. The name Pumori is derived from Sherpa language that literally means 'Unmarried young Daughter'. Which is also known as Everest's little daughter lies just eight kilometres west of Mount Everest. Climbers often use Mount Pumori to build confidence and gain technical skills. Before attempting to climb Everest or other 8000m peaks. On 1962 Gerhard Lenser has made the first successful ascent to the summit of Mount Pumori. He was a member of the German-Swiss Expedition team. Climbers sometimes refer to Pumori as "Everest's Daughter". Mallory also called it Clare Peak, after his daughter. Later in 1996, Czech nationals namely Leopold Sulovsky and Michalec Zeduak opened a new route south-west ridge. Which is considered even more difficult than the normal route used by Lenser. Climbing South-West route of Mt. Pumori includes technically difficult sections, ascend of icy slopes ranging from 40-60 degree slopes at higher camps. Xtreme Climbers climbing Sherpa guide will set fixed ropes up this wall of ice. And a final push to the summit passing over crevices and then up over the cliff face to reach the summit top. As per the record by the government of Nepal and the Department of Tourism the summit is recorded at the coordinates of: 28°00'53"N, longitude and 86°49'41"E latitude.

Xtreme Climbers follows the standard route on the Southeast ridge, a grade 3 snow and ice climb that requires a good understanding of alpine climbing techniques. Above the base camp at 5,300m/17,388ft. we sets up 2 to 3 camps Climb through the glaciers and knife-edged ridge of hill side for about 3-4 hours and reach Camp 1 at 5,700m/18,701ft. From camp 1, we climb the face with 45-60 degrees slope and pass through a snow wall to reach camp 2 at 6,200m/20,341ft.

From camp 2, climb through ice walls and crevasses to reach camp 3 at 6,500m/21,325ft. Passing through crevasses, climb up to Pumori cliff and then to the summit. This peak is suitable for those climbers who are looking for demanding 7000m climbing. Climbing South-West route will give you required technical climbing.
